“The Six Grandfathers” was a sacred mountain that belonged to the Lakota Sioux tribe, but after various military campaigns, the United States claimed it, violating the 1868 Treaty of Fort Laramie in which the government recognized the Black Hills as part of the Lakota Reservation. That mountain then became Mount Rushmore.

Before 1924, Native Americans were not considered citizens nor were they allowed to vote. It wasn’t until the Snyder Act of 1924 that they were granted these rights.

Native Americans played a big role in both World Wars. The army employed the Native men to use their little known languages of the Comanche, Hopi, Meskwaki, and Navajo peoples which were used to exchange top secret information. They were called “Code Talkers.”
